No Really Solid Catholic Gets into Trouble

In 1944, I entered the Navy as an ensign. I was discharged on St. Patrick's day in 1946, as a lieutenant, junior grade. In 1947, I met my wife, Margaret Ellen Almquist, of Southgate, a Los Angeles suburb. In January 1948 we were married at Mission San Juan Capistrano and a year later we welcomed our first son, Patrick.

Like all fathers who served, I am constantly besieged with demands from my offspring to tell them of my exploits during the second World War. Naturally, I try not to destroy their picture of me as a combination Hopalong Cassidy-Gene Autry-Flash Gordon. I did serve as a line officer with amphibious forces before being ordered to head a special services unit to tour the Pacific area. While my experiences will never go down in Naval history, they do seem to make passably good listening, at least for youthful McNulty ears.

I tell them of life aboard a fighting ship: of the spine-tingling sensations that accompanies every call to battle stations; of beach landings and the thundering barrage of heavy guns; of the time of a Japanese suicide plane crashed into the side of an aircraft carrier when we were putting on a show for the officers and men and how that killed 27 of our crew.

But I tell them of others things, too. I tell them of men saying their Rosaries while standing watch in the gun turrets; of chaplains and sailors reciting the prayers for the dying in the darkness of the Pacific night; of the time I served midnight Mass celebrated at Pearl Harbor on Christmas Eve, 1944, for a congregation of servicemen from every branch of the armed forces.

And when my children are old enough to understand fully, I'll tell them that I never came across a man with a really solid Catholic education and background who ever got into any serious trouble. There must have been a few bad apples, I suppose, but I never ran into one of them.

Watching my kids now as they romp around the living room in the evening, I try to picture them as they will be 10, 15 or even twenty years hence. Will they be upright, God-fearing men and women, a credit to their country? They will be as long as I have anything to say about it, as long as I can be the best good Catholic for them!

REVIEW YOUR FAITH

Why do we honor the saints in heaven?

We honor the saints in heaven because they practiced great virtue when they were on earth and because in honoring those who are chosen friends of God we honor God himself.

The saints are not just statues in the church. These merely represent the saints, who were real people like ourselves, whose souls are now in heaven. They loved God very much while they were on earth, so now they are His special friends. In honoring them, we really honor God, since it was by His action on their souls that they became saints.

When we read the lives of the saints, we should remember that we are reading about real people whose souls are still alive in heaven and who want to help us.
