Our Life's Duty

Regardless of the degree of charity to which a soul may have attained and of its particular vocation, there is for every Christian a duty of apostolate based upon the very fact of his being a Christian, that is, a member of the Mystical Body of Christ. "So we being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." For as in our body each member is interested in the welfare of the other members, and if one member suffers anything, all members suffer with it; or if one member is honored, all the others rejoice with it," so every Christian is bound to be concerned about the welfare of others.

"The cause of all evil lies in the fact that we consider as alien the things that concern our own body (the Mystical Body of Christ). No one is fulfilling his own duty if he ignores his neighbor's salvation. If you dare to contend that you have nothing in common with your fellow member, if you think you have nothing in common with your brother, then neither have you Christ in your head." These strong words of St. John Chrysostom remind us that the apostolate is not an extra, it is not something optional, left to free will and the generosity of individuals; it is the express duty of every Christian, a duty which comes from the very nature of Christianity, a duty so binding that one cannot be a true Christian without complying with it.

As St. Paul to the early Christians and St. John Chrysostom to the Church of Antioch, so today the Vicar of Christ raises his voice to inculcate in the faithful throughout the world the great duty of the apostolate. Jesus by his death on the Cross merited grace for us, and "It was possible for Him personally and immediately to impart these graces to men; but He wished to do so only through a visible Church that would be formed by the union of men, and thus through that Church, every man would perform a work of collaboration with Him in dispensing the graces of Redemption. The Word of God willed to make use of our nature, when in excruciating agony He would redeem mankind; in much the same way throughout the centuries He makes use of the Church that the work begun might endure." The Church is the society of the faithful; we are the Church; therefore, it is incumbent upon each one of us to cooperate in the diffusion of grace in souls. Unquestionably, the first in carrying out this work belongs to the bishops and priests, but next to them and under their direction, every Christian is called upon to take part in it. "Not only the sacred ministers and those who have consecrated themselves to God in the religious life, but also all other members of the Mystical Body of Christ have the obligation of working hard and consistently for the up-building and increase of this Body.

Jesus wills to make use of His members, that is, all Christians, to continue His redemptive work in the world. Being infinitely omnipotent, He can sanctify souls without help from anyone, just as He created everything out of nothing, but He needs us and our poor works, and He invites us; and begs us to sacrifice ourselves with Him for the salvation of others. "A tremendous mystery," exclaims Pius XII, "and one which can never be sufficiently mediated upon: that the salvation of many depends on the prayers and voluntary mortifications, undertaken for this end by the members of the Mystical Body of Jesus Christ and on the cooperation of the pastors and of the faithful. To be apostles means to lend Christ our talents and activity, so that He may continue to redeem and sanctify souls through us.
